MEMOIR

Stanford professor Krieger (Things No Longer There: A Memoir of Losing Sight and Finding Vision) delineates the metaphorical notion of "vision" and distinguishes it from literal and figurative "blindness." Convincingly, she maintains that blindness generates its own precious insights into self and the larger world. Krieger gradually lost her sight when she was well into adulthood, which enables her to draw valid, perceptive comparisons. Accompanied by her guide dog, she journeys throughout the country exploring the world from a fresh perspective. Like her first book, this is an inspiring account of loss and gain. Readers with an eye for the metaphorical will savor Krieger's journey.-L.M.
